

~~The Japanese elementary school have struggles about English classes.~~
What is a best answer of English learning early age? 1st. Nov. 2022.

In 2011, the Japanese government decided that English classes were compulsory in all elementary school's 5th and 6th grade students. Moreover, after a decade, a new English education plans were mandatory. The 3rd and 4th grade students need to take English classes once a week. 5

I believe that these innovations would harmful for children. Why I am concern about the projects comes from an obvious results. Firstly, the young generation's English skill do not improve comparing to the results of some researches in 1990's. Secondly, the Japanese English industry's capital gain is getting higher 10 even if today.

Many parents worry about their children's poor English skills. They are likely to look for a coaching school because they cannot be relief of daily school English classes. Almost all public schools have a difficulty of preparing acknowledged and professional English teachers. 15 Therefore, unfortunately, students are forced to learn an incorrect English in every class. Ironically, these student's parents have experienced same situation in their schooldage. Thus they are eager to provide an appropriate English education. A lots of English business companies welcome these situation because of an increasing their profits. 20 Some babies are being enforced to enter such an English baby class.

One Japanese simultaneous interpreter said that these phenomena is a sort of "PANIC".

In conclusion, we should be calm down and should think deeply about the English education for young age. Otherwise we might 25 become people who contribute to expand the English business.
